

Buffalo

African buffalos are strong and imposing animals of the African savanna. Although, today few populations exist outside the confines of national parks. Females form protective herds of 1,000 individuals whilst males are mostly solitary. These formidable grazers are the only wild cattle species, and bonds between females are strong. If one individual is under attack from a predator, the herd will rush to the victim's defence, and a herd is easily capable of driving away an entire pride of lions.

Information and photo retrieved from http://www.bbc.co.uk/nature/life/African_Buffalo